

About Greenview Golf Club

Warren G. Harding was president, prohibition was in full swing, and Betty White was still in diapers when the golf course at Greenview Golf Club first opened in 1922. Today, the 18 holes on the green are much the same as when they opened, but around them, the clubhouse has firmly placed itself in the current century. Thanks to an extensive renovation in 2015, the club has added over 2,500 square feet of amenities for guests to enjoy, including a driving range, a lounge, and a full-service restaurant. Not only that, but the club has also taken a step into the future with its high-tech golf simulator, which helps players fine-tune their skills no matter what the weather.

Paul Green

- His many talents: Although Paul Green is a comedian, that's not all in his bag of tricks; guests can also expect improvised jazz solos on the piano, on-the-spot love songs to audience members, and Rubick's cube solutions in under three minutes.
- Hecklers welcome: Unlike most comedians, Paul's only request to hecklers is one thing—speak up! With wit and humor, Paul engages his audiences in comedic conversations everyone can enjoy.
- Can you bring the kids?: Absolutely; this Paul Green comedy show is 100% family-friendly.

About Annabel Lee Tavern

Named for the titular character of one of Edgar Allen Poe's tragic poems, it might be natural to assume that the Annabel Lee Tavern would house some of Poe's signature gloom. But while it's true that his foreboding words are written on the walls, the tavern is actually as homey as a tribute to Romanticism can be. A friendly staff and cozy interior greet customers, who sit down to feast at wooden barstools and lantern-lit tables. On the menu, patrons can order entrées such as the grilled chicken "Annapolis" sandwich topped with house crab dip or mango vegetable curry served over a bed of couscous. But, of course, lest the patron saint of Annabel Lee Tavern be forgotten, Poe's portrait hangs over the mantel, where his mournful eyes gaze out over diners at their meals.
